It is intended to make the SHELBY SENTINEL a first-class Family Newspaper, independent of sect or party, devoted to General News, Literature, and Morality. Appropriating the necessity for a Superior Newspaper in this part of Kentucky, we will bend every energy to make the SHELBY SENTINEL acceptable to all classes. To those who have a distaste for partisan strife, our paper will be a welcome guest. In the angry mutterings of discord, will be hushed in the endeavor to heal the frightful wounds, which years of war have caused. To sustain our paper, we naturally expect the assistance and co-operation of the people of Shelby. While the local interests of this section will not be neglected, we will aim to advance the general prosperity of the State.

The general interests and welfare of the county can in no better way be advanced than through the medium of a newspaper. Devoting our attention to all topics of the day, we will freely and independently discuss them. To prevent any misapprehension as to the position which the SHELBY SENTINEL will occupy, we will state that our approval and support will be given to a mild and conciliatory policy, condemning all radical, revolutionary or unjust measures. Believing that this is the only course which will result in permanent prosperity to the country and that those who are such as the people of Kentucky naturally and heartily endorse, we shall uphold and defend them at all times. Firm in the opinion that we can make our paper acceptable, we ask a liberal patronage.

SHADOWS.

BY JENNIE FOREST.

When the evening is creeping
Round the bright emparfled West,
And the stars their vigils keeping,
O'er the "early one to rest."
When the whippoorwill is trilling,
Plaintively his evening song;
And the beauty of its cadence,
Through the twilight floats along.
Then around my heart there lingers
Memories of an image fair,
Stealing o'er my spirit's vision,
Mingling with my evening prayer;
And methinks I see the moonbeams,
Falling on a lonely tomb,
Where the myrtle and the daisies
In their early beauty bloom.

One by one the years have glided,
With their weary feet away,
Since our last farewells were spoken,
On that rose-crowned eve in May;
One by one the lengthening shadows,
O'er my darkened pathway fell,
Since we left him softly sleeping
In thimble-leaf cypress dell.
Like the shadows of the pine trees,
Resting on the silvery streams,
Darkness creeps into my spirit,
Crushing bright and cherished dreams.
Oh, ye shadows! lingering shadows,
My weary heart must ever weep,
Yet we know our absent loved one
"Sleepeth well," the dreamless sleep.

From the Crescent Monthly.

PHILIP: MY SON.

I saw my boy growing rapidly into manhood with the growth of his love. It was the first love of a strong and passionate nature, and a young man's first love so seldom has root in anything deeper than mere physical beauty. Margaret Thorpe was a woman to infatuate enthusiastic nature, especially of boys or very young men. There was a peculiar fascination about her rare loveliness—her manner, half-child-like, half-dignified—her winning voice, and willowy, graceful figure. At times I believed her utterly unconscious of Philip's sentiments toward her, she seemed to meet his impulsive demonstrations so calmly, and look almost with surprise at any sudden outburst of earnestness; but anon this changed, and when I saw her sitting with down-cast eye and drooping lash under the gaze which he fixed upon her, listening with that peculiar manner she knew so well to assume, and replying in a voice so tenderly cadenced, lifting her violet eyes to his, then I knew she felt and believed it. No woman could doubt such evidence.

Philip seemed to grow taller and grander. There was a pride in his bearing; the splendid Antinous-like head, the flashing eagle eye, the quivering, finely cut nostril, the mouth and chin shaped like a woman's in its delicate curves—all were touched with new fire, undying, immortal. As he dismounted from his horse at the gate and walked up the garden path with his stately step, I heard Margaret, who was watching him from the window, murmur to herself: "Philip, my king!" Long years after I heard that same voice, broken by tears, chaunt an exquisite, home-lyric, bearing a similar burden of love and pride, as she folded a tiny white-robed Philip in her arms.

They went out often together, sometimes on horseback, sometimes walking. On these latter excursions Margaret frequently carried a little basket on her arm filled with sand-wiches, and cake, and a bottle of home-made wine; and Philip would take a fishing rod, while out of the breast-pocket of his coat would peer the azure binding of Tennyson, the inevitable and invariable companion on all occasions, though I heard Philip declare laughingly he could not comprehend one word from preface to finis of the volume, except the poem quoted daily to the praise of his idol, "Margaret." What all this tended to, I could not tell. I did not even know if Philip had declared his affection. Like one in a dream, I was content for all things to go on as they had done, and dreaded a change; but it came at last.

Late one evening I was half dozing in my arm-chair by the sitting-room window. The day had been intensely warm, and the entire household appeared overpowered by some influence in the atmosphere. Philip had ridden off before the sunset. I saw him dashing down the avenue like one mad, and presently Margaret went up stairs with her light step, humming in a mocking voice, it seemed to me, a foolish little French chanson. I had left the two very good friends in the verandah after dinner, Philip smoking and playing with Margaret's ball of gold thread, while she sat demurely netting on that wonderful piece of work, half-smoking cap, half-turban; but somehow, these latter days, there was a provoking air about Margaret that seemed at times to goad Philip almost to desperation. I knew now she had been teasing him again—my poor boy, who had never been denied the smallest boon in all his short, bright life.

From where I sat, I could see Margaret's white dress gleaming between the rose vines as she sat on the steps of the piazza, half-hid from view by thick clusters of multiflora, and drooping sprays of clematis.

She had a manuscript-book in her hand—this very one that lies beside me now—of satin vellum, richly embossed; while her chin rested in the palm of the other, and her head was bowed in deep reverie. There was a step on the gravel, and I heard her say, without raising her head: "Come here, Philip! I have something to read to you—" and then went on, in a low, steady monotone peculiarly impressive in its exquisite modulation—flowing on like the sound of water far off:

"Have you sent her all her letters? Have you given her back her ring? Have you written to forget the songs you loved to hear her sing? Have you cursed the day you met her first—thanked God that you were free? And said in your inmost heart as you thought: 'She never was dear to me! You have cast her off; your pride is touched; you fancy that all is done—That for you the world is bright again, and bravely shines the sun? You have washed your hands of passion—you have whistled her down the wind—Ah, Tom, old friend, this goes before—the sharpest of the sharpest is yet to come, for Love is a plant that never dies. Its roots are deep as the earth itself—its branches wide as the skies; And whenever once it has taken hold, it flourishes evermore: Blossoming still, and bearing its beautiful fruit with the bitter core."

You have learned this, Tom, hereafter, when anger has cooled, and you have time for retrospection, you will find my words are true: You will sit and gaze in your fire alone, and fancy that you can see Her face with its classic oval—her ringlets fluttering free, Her hazel eyes wide open, and her sweet red lips apart, As she used to look in the golden days, when you dreamed she had a heart: Whatever you do—wherever you turn, you will see that glorious face Coming with shadowy beauty to haunt all time and space. Those songs she sang so sweetly, will sing themselves in your brain Till your life seems set to their rhythm, and your thoughts to their refrain—Their old, old burden of love and grief—the passion you have foreseen—I tell you, Tom, it is not thrown off so well as you think this moment!

But the worst, perhaps the worst of all will be when the day has flown, When darkness favors reflection, and your comrades leave you alone, You will try to sleep, but the memories of forgotten years Will come with a storm of wild regrets, unyouthful with a storm of tears—Each look, each word each playful tone, each playful little caress, The earnest look in her hazel eyes, the rustling of her dress, The delicate touch of her ungloved hand that woke such an exquisite thrill—The flowers she gave the night of the ball, I think you treasure them still—All these will come till you slumber, worn out by sheer despair, And then you will hear vague echoes of song on the Vague echoes rising and falling of the voice you know so well, Like the songs that were sung by the Lurley maid, sweet with a deadly spell!

She stopped, and it seemed like the breaking of a dream. Philip sat at her feet; I could not see his face, but I heard his quick breath come and go, as if he panted for relief.

"Margaret!" he exclaimed in a hoarse voice, "don't torture me! Torture you, Philip?" "Yes, you know you do! Margaret, you have won me with your syren songs, and now you wreck me without a shadow of remorse or feeling!"

"It is not my fault that you love me; I never encouraged you." "Not your fault?" exclaimed Philip, in that passionate, uncontrollable manner which he so often used of late. "Not your fault! Did you not look up into my face with those beautiful eyes of yours and say plainly with them, again and again, that you accepted my love? Do you not flatter me with every cadence of your voice—every smile so deadly sweet, to believe that you knew, and requited it? And now you call me to fawn at your feet, and listen to those verses you knew would erase my very brain, and say it is not your fault that I love you! Oh, Margaret, Margaret!"

"Philip, you wrong me! Listen, for I will speak"—He interrupted her with a gesture eloquent of despair.

"Don't, Margaret! I know you are going all over those cruel words again—about my being younger than you, and how I surprise you, and the utter absurdity—all those words mean nothing to me. I don't believe any of it! Just tell me now, once and forever—do you not love me at all—not at all?"

He leaned forward so eagerly and caught her hand. There was a brief silence; and I waited to hear Margaret Thorpe speak. She only said, in a half-suppressed, breathless way, "I am engaged!"

I could not endure it. I rose from my seat and went out into the piazza, where the moon, lately risen, shed her clear, pure light over the two figures on the steps, and yet so false.

"Margaret Thorpe," I said, "may God deal with you as you have dealt with my son!"

Philip and I were alone. The old clock ticked drowsily in the motionless, noon-day air; but no other sound broke the intense stillness.

"Is she gone mother?" Philip asked, raising his head from the arm of the sofa, as suddenly the tramp of horses and the rolling of wheels over the old bridge at the creek came distinctly upon the silence; and I heard a great sigh of relief, knowing that the fatal shadows of one-syllable like form would not darken our door again.

Philip repeated his question. I only bowed my head, and asked him if he would have anything—a glass of iced water, or a cooled melon, or—me rest!" and he put down his head again, and sighed heavily.

Oh, was his mother's love nothing to him! He was all the world to me, yet I was powerless to comfort him. I knelt down beside the sofa and placed my hand on the shining ringlets, now so disheveled with restless tossing to and fro, and twined them softly round my fingers. "Philip, my boy, you have your mother still!"

He threw his arm around me, and the eagles eyes had lost their splendor, they beamed with tenderness.

"I have my mother still! Yes thank God! I have been a wayward, ungrateful boy, but I am strong now. Forgive me, mamma! Your Philip has not lost all his manhood; he will try to be a better son in future."

There was a tinge of bitterness in his voice, but he conquered it as he went on.

"I was blind, infatuated! There is no language strong enough to express how madly I have dreamed, and what the breaking of that dream has cost me. But it is past. Come what will, I shall be strong!"

He rose as he spoke—he expanded. I

A CUTTING AFFAIR.—We regret to learn that at the public speaking near Clayville last Saturday, a difficulty arose between Mr. T. Stewart and Mr. Jacob Caplinger, both of this county, in which Mr. C. was considerably cut up.

DEATH OF DR. RALSTON.—That Dr. T. N. Ralston has lost his life upon the ill-fated General Lytle, we have much reason to fear. Dr. Ralston's name appears as one of the missing with the statement that the missing are supposed to be killed. While we hope for the best, we fear that the deplorable news is too true.

OUR TOWN.—The Teachers convention is being held in town this week, and quite a number of distinguished teachers are in attendance. The meeting of the Louisville Presbytery at this place, also brings in our midst several eminent ministers. Revs. Stuart Robinson, and S. R. Wilson among the number. Dr. R. preached at the Presbyterian Church last evening.

WAVERTY MAGAZINE.—We utter no fulsome, paid-for flattery, when we say that the Waverly far exceeds in literary merit, the various light literature emanations of the Eastern press. The Waverly is edited with care, and has some very able contributors. It is far superior to any periodical of its class, that we have seen. Moses A. Dow, Boston, Publisher.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.—The following is a list of new advertisements; Dental Card of Dr. Yates, Louisville. Notice of Crosby, Layson & Co. Farm for sale by Wm. Bullard. Prospectus of New York Tribune. Mule Strayed. Shelby Gymnasium, by Professor B. S. Newland Jr. Booths for Rent. Letter list. Farm for Sale by S. P. Middleton. Notice from Town Marshal. Coal for Sale by H. C. Petry.

The Schools of Shelbyville. Within the past few weeks catalogues and circulars have been issued from this office for various schools and academies in our midst, showing their prosperous condition, and setting forth the advantages which they each possess. We assert in no boastful spirit, but without fear of contradiction, that no town or village in the western country, is more highly favored with educational advantages, than Shelbyville, which is indeed a western Athens. We are not crowded with schools which are feebly supported, or which have a frail existence, but success, real and genuine success has been attained by them. Science Hill Female Academy the oldest Protestant institution in the valley of the Mississippi, having been in successful operation more than forty years, graduates annually large classes of young ladies from all parts of Kentucky, and southern and western states.

Kentucky Female College an institution owned principally by the Baptist of Shelby County, is liberally supported by that denomination, and has many friends who appreciate its advantages throughout the south-west.

Shelbyville Female College is ably presided over by Rev. D. T. Stuart, who for fifteen years, has had charge of the school, during which time it has enjoyed prosperous classes.

Shelbyville Male High School, needs no word of praise. The thorough instruction inculcated and the ability of Professors J. W. and W. W. Dodd have rendered it a decided success. Prosperity always attends this institution.

Shelby College will undergo very important changes; in consequence of which the next session will be deferred until October, when it will offer excellent advantages for the thorough instruction of young men.

The Primary Schools of Mrs. H. G. Allen and Miss Sue Fulton, as well as the District School, afford the little ones the opportunity for entering upon the field of knowledge, guided by kind and skilled instructors.

In addition to the schools in our midst, we would call attention to the Shelby Gymnasium in this county, of which Prof. B. S. Newland, Jr., is Principal. Those who prefer a country institution, with the advantages of able instructors, will find the Shelby Gymnasium very desirable.

Rev. H. F. Jordan, at Bagdad, has a flourishing school, where an English and classical education may be acquired. We have only enumerated those of which we have personal knowledge as to course of study and educational advantages. There are others in the county from which we have not heard. All together, we possess educational advantages of superior merit. While we appreciate the present prosperous condition of our schools, and remember with pride the success of the past, we confidently predict for Shelbyville a position of superior importance in the future. Shelbyville, rendered easy of access by the convenience to the Louisville and Lexington R. R., and in prospect of the early completion of a railroad at our doors, presents attractions which persons seeking quiet, healthy homes, without the disadvantages of city life, will not be slow in appreciating.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.—We have not the space to notice editorially each new advertisement that appears this week, but call attention to all of them. Money is not only made by advertising, but it is made and saved by reading the advertising columns of a newspaper.

News Summary.

James C. Ayer, of Lowell, Mass., returns an income of $61,862. General Benjamin F. Butler, of the same place, $28,552.

An Englishman by the name of George Russell died in Memphis on Tuesday last from starvation.

The cholera is said to be prevailing as an epidemic in St. Louis, but little is said about it.

The city of Lowell has been sued by a child seventeen months old, to recover $5,000 damages for being run over by a city team. The suit is conducted by the father of the young litigant.

Two men and a boy, who were found guilty of murder and robbery three months ago, at Louisa, Ky., were taken out of jail by a mob, on Thursday, at that place, and hanged until they were dead.

The planting of cotton in Illinois is thus far a success. Accounts from that State say that the crops are promising. One planter has two hundred acres of cotton under cultivation.

The Massasoit Insurance Company, of Springfield, Mass., voted on Tuesday to cease issuing policies, and will wind up its affairs, being led to this by the heavy losses recently sustained by the Portland fire.

A. T. Stewart's great branch dry-goods house at Savannah, Ga., will measure forty-two feet front, by three hundred and ten feet deep, and have six stores. Its height will be ninety feet from the sidewalk, and it will be built of pure white marble.

DUEL WITH KNIVES.—Wm. Williams and Alex. England fought with knives at Clay's Ferry, near Richmond, Ky., a few days ago. England was killed. Howard Ogg shot and killed Hud. Jarmen near the same place on Wednesday.

Mr. Thornton and Mr. Singleton, both of Versailles, Ky., quarreled on Monday last, and shot each other. Singleton was shot in the side, the ball striking a rib and passing around the body. Thornton was shot in the thigh. Neither of the wounds are considered fatal.

A PEACE MESSAGE.—It is remarkable that the first message over the completed Atlantic cables of 1858 and 1866 were both peace messages. The former announced the close of a war then pending between England and France and China; the latter, the close of the European war.

On Wednesday last, Mr. G. W. Chambers, an old and highly respected citizen of Hancock county, Ky., was found dead in his tobacco field. There was a terrible gash on the top of his head, made, apparently, with a hoe. Near him a heavy hoe was found lying, the blade of which was covered with blood. The supposition is that he was murdered by negroes formerly owned by him. No arrests have been made.

A SEVERE JOKE ON A CLERGYMAN.—A clergyman was once sent for in the middle of the night by one of the ladies of his congregation. "Well, my good woman," said he, "so you are very ill, and require the consolation of religion? What can I do for you?" "No," replied the old lady, "I am only nervous and can't sleep." "How can I help that?" asked the parson. "Oh, sir, you always put me to sleep so nicely when I go to church, that I thought if you would only preach a little for me!" The parson "made tracks."

The Herald's City of Mexico correspondent, writing under date of July 10th, says the reorganization of Maximilian's army appears to be progressing finely. A great rush is being made on the American Consul by American citizens for their nationality papers, on account of the impending draft. No new military operations had taken place since the fall of Monterey, except the attack upon Jalapa, which was going on when the dispatch sailed. A New York company of capitalists had purchased the Floo railroad grant, and engineers are already at work.

The Mammoth Cave in Kentucky, is not without its story of love and romance. Some twenty years ago, a dashing Tennessee girl promised her mother that she would not marry a certain man "on the face of the earth"—said suitor being particularly objectionable to the old lady. So there was a quiet in the family for some time. But one pleasant day the gay girl and her lover ran away and went into the Cave, to a spot now called the "Bridal Chamber," and in the presence of a few witnesses, were there matrimonially united, about 325 feet below the "face of the earth."

The Rev. Mr. Gardiner, for thirty years a traveling minister of the Methodist Church in this State, was taken from the house at Georgetown, in which he was a guest, by some men in disguise, on Tuesday night of last week, and carried to Big Spring, and ducked in the water, until he, it is said, was nearly drowned. He had been preaching in the Negro Church at that place, which had given offence to the parties engaged in his ducking. He is the Superintendent of Colored Missions in the State. Out of the affair, a difficulty occurred a few days ago, between a Mr. Adams and a Mr. Johnson, in which the former was dangerously cut with a knife.
